OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

Mr. Pugh and bls Coming Address. The Hon. George E. Pugh has consented to address the people of this city upon the present condition of affairs, at Smith & Nixon's Hall, this evening. That Mr. Pugh will present any other than a party view of the case is not probable, if any one may judge by his late speech in the Senate. His legislative course, thus far, does not indicate that his mind has penetrated beyond party exigencies, or contemplated any thing more than party results. To raise the temperature throughout the non-slaveholding States high enough to burn out the Republican Party, is the policy indicated by those with whom he co-operated; and it is not probable that his exertions will be directed toward a more rational enterprise. He will, therefore, seek to give an aspect of dignity and importance to the doings in South Car olina; and while he professes great love of the Union, and calarges upon the necessity for its preservation, will insist that its continuance depends upon some concession or other to be made by the "North" to the "South" as an inducement to the latter to refrain from going out any further than it

If the nation were really in danger, such a course would be trifling with the public interest and the public mind, and would deserve serious and severe condemnation. If Mr. Pugh believed that the nation was in danger, we have respect for his character to lead us to think that he would not trifle at go important an exigency. But the nation is not in danger; the peril is to party, not to national bonds of union; there is no especial demand for self-sacrificing patriotism; and therefore it will be in order to permit Mr. Pugh to go on in the old party path, to pursue the old party ends, and revel in that vocabulary of phrases of terrible sound with which it is proposed to frighten the people of the Union into doing some thing very desperate, though what exactly it is to be does not appear. We sincerely hope that Mr. Pugh will have no prescription to present for the improvement of the health of the Union; and this: first, because the Union is not an invalid; secondly, because that however drastically the North may be physiced, there are no indications that it will thereby be readered more acceptable to the South; and thirdly, because every plan that has been put forth has been but a combination of the ridiculous and the impracticable : seeming only to exhibit the emptiness of its author for service in any real exigency, his want of knowledge of mankind, and his utter destitution of all just ideas of the nature and limits of Government in general, and of our form of national polity in particular. Than in them political quackery certainly never had a more perfect exemplification.

The political career of Mr. Pugh is nowfor the present-drawing to a close; and it is probable that this is the last opportunity he will enjoy to address his constituents at home, before the close of his official term. On such an occasion it will be happy for him if he shall be able to leave upon the minds of his fellow-citizens the impression that he has raised himself above the level of the mere partisan, and has become, if not a statesman, at least a sound and sagacious politicism. Important party changes are imminent. They will follow closely upon the heels of the President agitations, by which they are foreshadowed. Before the time when he will be able to gather for a new ascent, his party antecedents will have become unavailable. Just views of the Constitution, of the powers of the Governe ment, of the duties of the Executive, of the demerits of the authors of this agitation, and rational prognostics as to its finality, will be as creditable to him as it will be acceptable to the community.

The President and his Treachery. Perhaps it is not unprecedented in the history of the world, but it is certainly unusual to find the head of a Government-the chief executive officer of a nation, placed in power by the consent of its people, and with no rival to dispute his right to governdeliberately preparing the way for those who seek to dissolve the national tenure and overthrow the Constitution. To find such a state of circumstances in a country whose people claim to be the most enlightened in political affairs of any in the world, and to possess the most parental and perfect of all known forms of Government, is assuredly a thing not easy to parallel. Yet this is the aspect which the United States of America presents at this moment to the contemplation of the civilized world. The President of this Union - whether through utter imbecility or utter dishonesty it is difficult to say-is practically a traitor. using, apparently without shame and without conscience, his official authority to strip the Government of its defenses, and leave it open to acts of violence on the part of those who are planning its dissolution. It is not necessary to refer to facts in this connection. They are widely known and stand undisputed. The national arms are being removed from the peaceful North, and placed unprotected in the very localities where disaffection is known to exist; and in all those places where there is the appear ance of an organization against the public tranquility, the national defenses have been eft to fall into the hands of the insurgents whenever it shall suit their convenience to enter bpon the possession. This has been done by the express command of the President. There have been not acts of omission merely, but acts of commission. The State is being dismantled; the gates of the strongholds have been left unguarded, and the enemy invited to enter; and this in spite of the general disgust of the people, and the most orgent remonstrances on the part of his

There is a time when party spirit should to become the prevailing sentiment. When the Government turns traitor, there is no room among Bonest men for a party in its favor. In this part of the United States, there can be but one opinion in respect to the demerits of that President who lends himself to the work of national destruction. The infamy that attends the obscure and powerless conspirator becomes respectability, in contrast with the gigantic orime of which the Prendent of the United States is guilty in the first of that people who invested him with authority. The most huncentral residue to which a human being can asplie to being prestituted to the basest of purposes. Upon the summit of that political pyramid which was raised by patriots and statesmen, and for which we demand the admiration of the world, there sits a traitora being who, if his acts are indicative of his intentions, would willingly rive that pyramid to fragments, and scatter far and wide its dishonored ruins.

So unacquatomed are we to think of treachery at the head of the government of the people, that we have no standard by which it may be measured. The mind does not readily take in the whole of its enormity. The word traitor has been so often used in party senses, that it is inadequate to describe the crime of him who, entrusted with the most sacred post in the governmental edifice, takes advantage of his position the more effectually to apply the torch of the incendiary. This difficulty, however, is but temporary. Time will enable all of us to arrive at a just conception of events and their bearings; and the people of the United States will not fail to do the most ample ustice to the memory of our first Presiden-

The Ohio Public Works The total deficit of the Public Works for the past year is $122,733. There are some items expended on former appropriations, and claimed as not strictly chargeable to the current year, but not more, if as much, much as similar items every year. The burden has become so great that it throws a heavy responsibility on the party baving the control of the State, and one which will endanger their supremacy unless they can furnish satisfactory reasons for retaining it; for it is skown by offers made during the last three years, that the State can relieve herself of this burden by selling or leasing the

There can be but one excuse for retaining them; that is the public interest. But to tax one part of the State to transport the commodities of another part, is not public interest. The taxation, only, is public. The interest is private. If the Public Works sustained themselves, they would be one of the public interests. When they do not, they become a local interest; and the taxes which they draw from the whole State are expended for private

If the canals were a public interest, why should the views of the residents upon them and of the people of other parts of the State differ so directly in regard to the interest of the public in them? When a representative from a canal district talks of the public interest in the canals, be means the interest of those who use them for the transportation of their products. That is his idea of public interest. And that they who have no use of them should pay taxes to keep them up, is his idea of public spirit.

If a law were passed that one-half of the cople of the State should be taxed to pay a part of the transportation of the wheat and corn of the other half, it is probable that instead of being called public interest, it would be called a public robbery; and instead of exciting public spirit, it would create a se-

But what is the difference between paying taxes directly on the price of transportation, and paying it on the means of transportation? No body can discover any.

People on the canals, and even in this ity, think they have got a good thing in the canals, which benefit them, while the State at large helps foot the bill; and that passed in a fortnight. To talk of it by they had better hold on to it. It is good to amending the Constitution, is mere triffing look out for number one, but it will gener- with the public danger. It is keeping the ally be found that correct policy will do this word of compromise to the ear, when better than any unfair advantage. All they nothing but partisan stratagem is intended, get by this course is canals in notoriously in order to gain some advantage in the bad condition, rapidly deteriorating, their record, and to affect to put the responsibility business rapidly declining, and themselves taxed for their quota of the deficiency; while under the management of private interest, the canals would be restored, their husiness increased, and their taxes lightened. So it don't pay even to those who think their interest is the public interest, A great many people talk as if the State should hold the canals, in order to keep up competition with railroads. This is a new idea of the public interest, that a State should compete with the business of its own citizens, and crush out their capital. If this is a republican principle of government, it might be vastly extended, until every business man should be kept to low prices by State competition, at the public expense. Another novel idea is that canals can better compete with railroads under State than under private management. Since when has official control become so much more efficient than private management? It has been thought heretofore that every man could best manage his own business. If the State can do it better, let its province be extended into all kinds of business, and individual sovereignty be abolished.

The canals are not competing with rallroads now. The State is merely footing up $100,000, or so, deficiency. There is no competition. Nor will there be, until they go into private hands. If the capals are needed, they will sustain and improve themselves. If they do not, it is evidence conclusive that they are not needed.

Business men, experienced in canal business, believe that private management can make them profitable. It would at least relieve the State from the taxation, and politics from a corrupting element. The worst that can happen, in case the decline of the canals continue, is, that they will be abandoned to those immediately interested in them. If neither business nor private interest will sustain them, they can go down without being missed. There is no reason why every transportation-tub should not stand on its own bottom; and the State should relieve itself of this entangling alhance. The Republicans have the Democrats already committed to the disposal of the capals. If they present an efficient measure this winter, the Democratic members of the Legislature will have to support it, or show that they were insincere. If they do not, the Democrats will make it the leading feature of their policy, and will keep them busy with it through the whole session, and perbe husbed, and love of country be allowed haps, carry a measure through in spite of the Republican majority; or if not, will put the onus of the Public-Works deficit on them.

> Singular Idea of Unefulness. The Washington correspondent of the Enquirer specially dispatches the following philosophical reflection to that paper, on the way to make negroes useful:

"The slaves will not murder their masters and mistresses, whom they love, unless they are incited to do so by white men. The negro is not a leader; he must be fed to be metal."

After an agitation which was forced upon the country by the repeal of this sacred compromise of thirty years' standing an agitation which has done more to alienate the people of the nation, and divide them by sectioned lines, than all other causes since the foundation of the Government, and which now threatens the dissolution of the Union, its restoration is now advocated as the only means of saving the Union, by the very politicians who broke it down, and who have drawn their political existence ever since from the agitation which grew

So humble a confession from a great political party, that its policy has brought ruin upon the country, and so complete a justification of the course of its opponents, is a new thing in the history of politics and of popular Governments. The theory of monarchy is that the King can do no wrong. In this country we shift the infallibility to the people, and we talk of the voice of the people being the voice of God. But here is a great party confessing that it has done wrong, and professing a contrite desire to make reparation by restoring the compromise which it violated.

But if this is sincere; if it is intended in good faith to support the restoration of this ompromise, to settle the present dangers; if it is not a mere partisan stratagem, to be supported because it is thought that the other party will refuse it, let the proposition be divested of all political trickery and put in a practical shape. It does need an amendment to the Constitution to restore the Missouri Compromise. It existed thirty years by act of Congress. Nobody ever doubted its constitutionality. To declare it unconstitutional was a part of the trick to break it, when it was thought that a stronger game could be played. As a part of the trick is confessed, let a clean breast be made, and the whole game be thrown up.

No honest man doubts the constitutionality of the Missouri Compromise. It is probable that it could pass the present Congress. This is the only practicable shape in which it can be proposed. To establish it by amendment of the Constitution requires the assent of two-thirds of the States, and it is not at all likely that it could be had, South Carolina, and other States which are determined to secede, would probably not vote on the question, therefore they would be counted against it. It is not at all likely that a majority of the Southern States would go for it. The ears of their people are still tingling with the harangues of their politicians against the Missouri Compromise as a wrong inflicted upon the South. It is by no means probable that it coul arry even half of the Northern States. The Democrats have submitted to political sacrifice to abolish it because it was claimed to be a wrong upon the South. Their wounds are yet too fresh, and hair of the same dog will be too severe an application.

The people at large will not relish the offer of a second trial of a broken compromise, and that, too, from the violators.

Even if it could pass two-thirds of the States, the constitutional form requires In the form of a constitutional time. amendment, the proposition is utterly impracticable. In Congress, if the South and the Democracy would go for it, it could be on snother party.

Any body who honestly desires to restore the Missouri Compromise, knows that it is constitutional for Congress to-do it. Any Democrat who sincerely wishes to restore it, knows that if the Democracy in Congress support it, it can be passed. And we take it that any man of good sense knows that to propose it as a constitutional amendment, is mercly introducing another abstraction into politics, merely to dodge behind.

THE Enquirer labors to prove that if Mr. Douglas should now advocate the restoration of the Missouri Compromise-line, it would not be inconsistent with his previous record.

As our Hibernian friends say: "An ye may well say that!" "The divil a lie there! If the line was as crooked as a ram's horn, he could go for it without being inconsistent with his previous record. It is the convenience of his record that he can go for the Missouri Compromise or against it, and still be consistent with his record; and for and against apy thing else, without the least inconsistency.

DIVISION OF THE ITALIAN ABNY .- The Italian army is to be divided into two great corps, one to be called the army of the South, the other that of the North; the former with its headquarters at Naples, the other at Mi-ian. The effective force of the army is fixed at 300,000 men.

The anti-Republican journals are pleased to state that the election of Lincoln has already cost the free States, in depreciatio of property, $480,000,000.
